For Allard + Roberts Interior Design, home is more than a structure. It's a refuge.

CLOCKWISE FROM TOP LEFT: A golf course townhome's abstract art served as inspiration for punches of color spread throughout the space; here, the hearth piece's vibrant royal blue is seen in the living room's chairs and pillows. Dark shiplap and a floating wood vanity add a contemporary mountain home twist to a bathroom. A kitchen's stained cabinets and complementing ceiling point to the outdoors and add warmth to the space. The adjoining living room continues the home's sense of rest with a wall of sliding glass doors that allows for an organic flow between indoor and outdoor spaces.

As a child battling leukemia, Talli Roberts spent countless days staring at the dull walls of a sterile hospital room.

"I understood very early the impact space has on mood and quality of life," Roberts shares. Now principal interior designer of Allard + Roberts Interior Design, she carries the notion of mindful living into every project. With a keen understanding of the need for rest, Roberts ushers peace and comfort by employing a clean, fresh, timeless perspective.

"If we are intentional about the finishes, fixtures, and furnishings we select and how we design, then we can create intentionally timeless and restful spaces," she says.

Armed with this philosophy, Roberts and her team approach each project with the client's lifestyle and aesthetic in mind. Gathering both visual and verbal inspiration from a home's owners, they craft bespoke interiors for high-end new builds and renovations alike, often acting as project managers.

"What we do is impossible without a team," Roberts adds. "It takes many skilled artists and craftspeople to create these beautiful spaces." Commissioning the talents of local artisans—for custom architectural elements, furniture, and decor—showcases the abundance of talent in Western North Carolina. Such partnerships allow the firm's projects to carry even more individuality.

From modern mountain homes that capitalize on nature's organic beauty to golf course townhomes with cherished art to working equestrian farms, each Allard + Roberts home is designed for its owners, yet each carries a signature timeless feel.

"Our world has a lot of background noise," Roberts says. "My goal is to create spaces where our clients can get away from the noise and focus on making memories with loved ones."
